WHY SHOULD I SUBSCRIBE TO A PREVENTATIVE MAINTENANCE PLAN?

Performing household maintenance at proper intervals allows you to minimize the chance of electrical failure. And when you observe electrical safety practices around the home, you can drastically reduce the chances of accidental shock or electrical fire. Review the following tips to help keep the power flowing and protect your family and guests.

◆ If you have breakers tripping and fuses blowing on a regular basis, it's time to bring in a professional to inspect your home.

◆ All outlets near wet locations such as kitchens, bathrooms, or laundry rooms should be Ground Fault Circuit Interrupters (GFCI).

◆ If you have children or grandchildren, put protectors in all your outlets or replace them with tamper-resistant outlets, as these are now required by code in all new homes.

INSTALL TAMPER-RESISTANT RECEPTACLES TO PREVENT INJURY TO CHILDREN

◆ Replace all plugs that wobble or fit loosely in the socket.

◆ Be sure all your circuits are properly grounded.

◆ Any indication of dimming lights, flickering lights, a sizzling sound, or a burning odor mandate a prompt professional investigation.

Hire a professional electrician to annually check your electrical systems, just as you would get a checkup for your personal health. A licensed electrician can check your electrical panel, tighten any wires that need it, and even use an infrared tester to identify which circuit breakers are getting too hot in the fuse box. This will keep your electrical system working efficiently, and gives you peace of mind about the safety of your home.

When you have routine service done, it will keep your important electrical systems running longer and help you avoid costly repairs. In the event that there is an issue with your wiring, your electrician can uncover it during this routine visit so that repairs can be done before the problem becomes bigger—reducing downtime and repair expenses.

Neglecting electrical preventative maintenance isn't worth the risk. You may be saving an expense today, but it will likely catch up to you in the long run, causing you to replace products more frequently and pay for repairs far more costly than the initial service visit would have been. Keep your family, employees, and property protected, and sign up for an electrical preventative maintenance plan today!
